The School of Management, University of South Australia will host 15 of the top PhD students from around the world to participate in a forum on the future of management in the 21st Century in Adelaide, Australia from 11th – 13th November 2013.

The PhD students will be selected based on a 1,000 word essay suitable for publication on the topic of management challenges facing the world and how to deal with them. Full details and conditions are available from the competition website.

The School has particular research interests in human resource management, tourism and event management, business ethics, arts and cultural management, innovation and entrepreneurship, operations and supply chain management, strategic management, sport and recreation management and strategic procurement.

The School will bring the 15 selected PhD students to Adelaide to participate in a roundtable discussion about the topics in the context of their PhD research. The discussion will be supported by meetings with business leaders, government officials, leading academics from the University of South Australia, and PhD students from the school’s research concentrations.

The selected PhD students will also spend a day in the company of local PhD students, in an event hosted by the School of Management Postgraduate Scholars’ Association.
Successful PhD students will enjoy the following:

- return flights to Adelaide from their nearest major airport
- four nights accommodation in a central city apartment in Adelaide
- transfer from Adelaide airport to city accommodation.

PhD students will need to organise their own visas. The School of Management will provide documentation to support visa applications.

PhD students from universities on all continents are invited to participate.

Applications should be submitted by 19th July 2013.

Full details and conditions are available from the competition website:

unisa.edu.au/Business/Management/International-PhD-Student-Competition/