

Associate Professor Jay Yang specializes in construction management and innovative building technologies.

A registered civil engineer (NPER), he has 20 years of professional, academic and consultancy experiences in Australia and overseas including infrastructure and commercial building construction.

He had successfully supervised PhD students and published widely on construction innovation research and smart building technology development. He is the founding Coordinator of Task Group 55 Smart and Sustainable Built Environments of CIB, which is the world's premium professional organization on building research and construction innovation.