Papers are invited for this special issue of Contemporary Nurse (ISSN 1037-6178) devoted to advances in mental health nursing. The special issue will deal with a comprehensive range of issues, processes, theories and practices aimed at the advancement of mental health nursing. The editors welcome papers on the theory, practice and research related to mental health nursing across the lifespan.

Papers that provide insight into mental health nursing, the challenges faced by those involved, and the strategies required to build a better future for the speciality area are particularly welcome. They may address:

- Nurse led carer and consumer participation in mental health service design and delivery
- Nurse led mental health promotion, prevention as well as intervention for those at risk of or experiencing mental illness
- Forensic mental health nursing (MHN)
- MHN for a multicultural society
- MHN in metropolitan, rural and remote clinical settings
- Models of mental health assessment associated with a range of problems
- Behaviours and needs with respect to physical, psychosocial and cognitive areas of human functioning
- Suicide and self harm
- Legal and ethical issues
- Mental health of indigenous people
- Mental health nurse education
- Rehabilitation and recovery
- Psychopharmacology
- Adherence to treatment
- Emergency mental health nursing
- Philosophical and theoretical models of MHN
- Application of behavioural, psychoanalytic, humanistic, existential and post-modern theories of the self in MHN
- Socio-cultural, neuroscience and medical models of MHN care
- Therapeutic counseling and engagement strategies
- Advanced therapeutic skills
- Ethical decision making in mental health care
- Clinical supervision
- Practice development
- Mental health nurse leadership
- Mental health nurse practitioners.
