Master of Business Administration (International
Hotel and Resort Management), graduated 2004

When Sanjukta Ghosh came to study in Australia, she left behind a great job with India's top hospitality company. Now, as one of the first graduates of the Le Cordon Bleu MBA in International Hotel and Resort Management and working in a management position within a deluxe multi-national hotel chain, she has no regrets.

"I wanted to move into the global hospitality industry," says Sanjukta. "I knew an international qualification from a reputable university would help me do that."

Sanjukta says that her lecturers helped her to get the most out of her program as they encouraged open discussion and self-directed study, but were also available to provide support when needed. Working within a collaborative student environment and having ready access to UniSA's range of services and facilities were other advantages.

"UniSA offered access to great research resources – particularly the library's online database," she says. "The study rooms in the library were great too. I often used them when I needed somewhere to study quietly."

The benefits of living in Adelaide have also been a highlight for Sanjukta and, after some initial culture shock, she quickly realised just how much her new home had to offer.

"Adelaide is a great place to live. The living costs are low, the climate is great and you can do things at your own pace," says Sanjukta.

"Talking to local students was invaluable for helping me understand the Australian environment better. It is a challenge to be outside your comfort zone, but it gives you tremendous confidence when you realise how self-sufficient you can be."
