Test preparation: a candidate’s insight

David is a Masters student at UniSA. He recently achieved the 7.0 IELTS score he required, but only at the eighth attempt. He started preparing for IELTS in a typical Chinese way – by memorising a number of so-called model essays from the internet. After five 6.5 Writing scores he realised no luck was involved and his learning method might not work with IELTS.

David booked an appointment with the free Advice and Counselling Service offered at CELUSA where he received tips in regard to language learning and some clarity around some famous ‘rumours’ about IELTS. Most importantly, the counsellor recommended a private tutor suitable to his level of English and current needs.

After a number of lessons his Writing improved from 6.5 to 7.5 and Speaking from 6.5/7.0 to 8.0 – achieved not by ‘luck’ or an ‘easy Examiner’, but with support, guidance and his own self-belief and determination. We’re happy to tell David’s story.
