The Shared Learning in Clinical Practice Philosophy

Shared Learning in Clinical Practice (SLiCP) is a policy relevant and service delivery focussed collaboration to promote best practice in mental health and suicide prevention. The strategic purpose of the initiative is to demonstrate through research and practical example, how much consumers, carers, clinicians, policy makers and academic faculty can achieve working together.

Deep discussion, deep connectivity and diffusion of the insights are central to its philosophy. With a nursing focus and multidisciplinary in composition, the aim of each publication, podcast, film, social media communication and symposium is to capture and spread new ideas and know-how in mental health practice and challenge traditional ways of thinking. SLiCP updates are regularly posted on Twitter at @MHRResearchUniSA or can be subscribed to by contacting mentalhealth@unisa.edu.au

About the 12th Shared Learning in Clinical Practice Symposium

The 12th Shared Learning in Clinical Practice Symposium is a Research Week special event led UniSA's Mental Health and Suicide Prevention Research Group. The symposium today will feature focussed discussion on Engagement in Mental Health and Suicide Prevention in South Australia, taking a 'deeper dive' into how and why collaboration is essential for effective mental health nursing, suicide prevention and education.

Speakers at today's symposium will showcase their work alongside the beliefs of why they work the way they do. Collaboration is at the heart of education and research in mental health nursing and suicide prevention. Participants attending the symposium will also discuss practical ways of working in sustainable collaboration within the sector.
