

Refugee and Migration Research Network.

UniSA

Human Rights and Security Research & Innovation Cluster

Refugee and Migration Research Network

In Australia, issues pertaining to asylum seekers, refugees and migrants including, health, education, employment, immigration detention, law, policy as well as social inclusion and settlement, are having increasing political, economic and psycho-social implications.

The UniSA Human Rights & Security Research Cluster has identified a large number of academics, from a diverse range of disciplines, who undertake research related to migration and refugees, and has decided to form a Refugee and Migration Research Network to facilitate discussion and collaboration on issues of common interest. All researchers – as well as government and community members – with an interest relating to people with various migratory backgrounds, are invited to join this Network.

The Refugee and Migration Research Network places particular emphasis on forming collaborative research partnerships with new and emerging refugee and migrant communities, government, NGOs and private bodies. Our aim is to develop a better understanding of the experiences of refugees and migrants, focussing on the aptitudes and strengths of those from a variety of migration backgrounds as well as the challenges that face them in resettling in a new country. Through this we hope to improve the settlement outcomes and experiences of all people migrating to Australia.

The Refugee and Migration Research Network will provide seminars, workshops and forums that offer constructive discussion, the exchange of ideas and opportunities for collaborative research that is responsive, applicable and constructive.

The Refugee and Migration Research Network welcomes new members!

To find out more, please contact:

Lynette Kelly

Senior Project Co-ordinator, Strategic Research Partnerships

e: lynette.kelly@unisa.edu.au

t: (08) 8343 8731

w: www.unisa.edu.au/research/clusters